Ashurst's Attempt to See Wilson Raises a New Question in Washington.

MANY CRITICISE HIM.

Action Regarded as an Invasion of the Privacy of the President.

By David Lawrence. (Openial Correspondent of The Eve-ning World.) WASHINGTON, Dec. 20 (Copyright,

2859. Senator Ashurst of Artsona, who paced the White House grounds impatiently and finally insisted upon an audience with President Wilson in the Executive Mansion, has started a discussion as to where the rights of Fresident of the United States and No. 232 East 71st Street, attached to his constitutional rights may be in-

The Arisona Senator was naturally anxious for Mr. Wilson to act emptly on the Mining Bill because affects so vitally his constituents back home, but whether or not he

STAND FOR "RIGHTS." preover, those who defend Mr. Markets. Wilson declare that the Senate has been very jealous of its prerogntives in the past and any attempt on the part of the President to ask the Senate formally what it would take on a panding bill would be resented. The most a president can do is to 'recommend" to Congress and the most a mater or member of Congress can do about a bill at the While House

Mr. Ashurst insists that he wasn't arring to influence the President, but simply to find out whether Mr. Wilson would sign or veto and when he would take action. Strictly speaking, officials say Mr. Ashurst had a right to gool his heels at the White House offices and wait there all day if he liked as a protest against inaction on measures which he wanted pressed, but to go uninvited beyond the offices into the privacy of the executive mansion where the President makes his weldence is invading the domain of the executive. The Arizona Senator went to the front door of the White House after he had found no one at the executive offices from whom he could get infor-The President's secretary gave Senator Ashurst assurances that

The fruth is the President always walts for a report from the Secretary of the department affected by any bills passed by Congress before approving or disapproving. The mining bill would affect the Interior Department. Secretary John Barton Payne happens to be out of the city and will not be back before to-morrow. Just as soon as the President gets into communication with Mr. Payne and finds out whether the latter hinks it ought to be signed, there will be action.

This is the normal course in handling legislation. And Mr. Wilson is given ten days by the Constitution to make up his mind what to do about bills passed by Congress. He has until Jam. 4 to decide, and, knowing the temperament of the President, there are those who think that unless repress are suppressed by a certain feet.

Yuletide and Its Swallow-tails

ROM one's reflections of plum puddings and the baronial halls of our ancestors, one awakens to the fact that it's time to dress for dinner and the dance.

And if the dance follows the dinner, it should be the swallow-tail - not the dinner coat. Let us remember those punctilious gentlemen who bequeathed to us evening dress as it is worn today.

In the formalities of dress they committed no errors-and the Christmas season was one of formality as well as merriment.

There is the restfulness of evening under the soft lights of the Evening Clothes Room in The Man's Shop - a peaceful contemplation of the full dress coat and the waistcoat, the dinner coat and the hat.

One gets there a sense of color and proportion-of evening dress proprieties-a realization that these clothes were made for the gentlemen and scholars of etiquette who observe the finer details.

Here is the single-stud evening shirt for full dress, and the two-studs-to-show shirt for the Tuxedo—the favored English dress collar and the tie whose correctness is so important.

The socks which may be worn, the dress shoes for both styles of evening suits, the muffler which does not violate good usageeverything which pertains to evening dress may be seen in its true relation.

This includes, of course, the evening dress overcoat in its various forms, from simple Melton to the luxurious full-fur-lined coat.

Should your need be merely a collar or a waistcoat, visit the Evening Clothes Room and judge of its completeness.
